My sister, Zuiker, is now a young adult. She is a beautiful, intelligent, and compassionate person. She has her own unique way of seeing the world, and she has taught me so much about life.

I remember when Zuiker was first diagnosed with autism. I was young, and I didn't really understand what it meant. I just knew that she was different from other kids. She didn't talk much, and she had difficulty interacting with others.

At first, I was embarrassed by Zuiker. I didn't want my friends to know that I had a sister with autism. I was afraid they would make fun of her or me.

But as I got older, I began to realize that there was nothing to be ashamed of. Zuiker is a wonderful person, and I am proud to be her brother.

Of course, there are still challenges. Zuiker can be difficult to communicate with at times. She also has difficulty understanding social cues.

But the challenges are worth it. Zuiker is a gift in my life. She has taught me so much about love, acceptance, and compassion.

I am so grateful that I have Zuiker as my sister. She is my best friend, and I love her more than words can say.

Here are some of the challenges I have faced growing up with an autistic sister:
